"Sir" Ivan Wilzig was punked at his 60th birthday party by a Tiffany Trump look-alike on the arm of fashion designer Andrew Warren.

"They pulled a fast one on me," Wilzig told me. "He said, 'Let me introduce you to Tiffany Trump.' I thought, 'She looks different. Did she get her hair straightened?' But I fell for it."

As 600 guests — some dressed, or undressed, as Adam and Eve — partied at his "castle" in Water Mill, LI, Wilzig launched into a story about how his banker dad, Siggie, had once loaned Tiffany's dad, Donald, $10 million to expand the doomed United States Football League.

"She's nodding and nodding," Wilzig said. The doppelgänger was later identified as Charlotte Bickley.

Warren said he never introduced Bickley as Trump, and said Wilzig must have been confused: "It's completely not true."

Other guests were Liam Neeson’s son Micheál Neeson, skin-care guru Jane Scher and designer Melody Mayer.
